OF INTEREST

The following is from an article Burn Loeffke just wrote for a local newspaper

The "March Back" is the culmination of weeks of tough training for new Army Cadets. West Point has many traditions. One of them is that graduates can join the cadets on a 12-mile march back from a summer training area. Cadets march in field uniforms, helmets, rifle, a 35-pound backpack and water container on the backpack. The graduates are advised to carry additional water bottles.

The Young And Not So Young

Leading the march is always a graduate from the oldest class participating. This year the oldest class was my class, 1957. Carrying the guidon (a small flag) was the graduate from the youngest class, the class of 2017.

We Will Follow

The first two rows in the front of the formation were filled with 70 and 80-year-old grads. Behind them, the younger classes followed. You kept up or were forced to drop out. This is a great exercise to unite the classes in a common effort. The march concluded with a lunch and motivational remarks.

Leading By Example

Gen. Darryl Williams is the President (Superintendent) of West Point. He is an inspirational motivator and speaker. What impressed me most was his backpack. The General is more than 35 years older than the cadets, yet he was carrying a 75-pound pack, twice what the cadets were carrying. It reminds me of a statement that a sergeant made to me when I was a cadet at West Point, "Sir, the troops won't mind the heat if you sweat with them." Gen. Williams was sweating on the march but didn't show tiredness. For Us Seniors, the General is an example of what we can do if we keep on exercising. Go Burn!. Go Supe!
